

McCandy

the partial screening of a character in question

(acclaim for Hunter Steele's first novel)

"Lineal successor of the Ginger Man and Lucky Jim."

John Braine, Sunday Telegraph

"A high-spirited, fun-loving book." Liverpool Daily Post

"Academic life has rarely been so scathingly derided. Steele's elegant wit lances many a boil and deflates much that is pompous, and this is a hugely enjoyable romp." Bournemouth Evening Echo

"Thoroughly enjoyable – done very successfully."

Cover To Cover, Grampian Television

"McCandy 'matters'; superficially it falls into the modern ironic-comedy idiom, but there is an underlying seriousness that derives from its firm attachment to ordinary people and careful rooting in real life."

Cambridge Roundabout

"Extraordinarily well written. I glided through it . . . much better than Tom Sharpe." Prof. Nigel Dennis

"I read 200 pages of it at a single sitting . . ." Prospect, Radio Scotland

"The university background [and] hearty drinking bouts are vividly captured along with blotto voce asides, and McCandy's relationship with his lovely patient Joanna is described with real secret lemonade drinker's tenderness."

Book Buyer

"Hunter Steele is very much more amusing than Tom Sharpe. Even the most critical reader is unlikely not to be entertained."

Martin Seymour-Smith, British Book News

"Very funny. It's a very good read." Penthouse

RRP £16.95, Hardback, 240 pages, ISBN 0-7195-3771-1
